

I may be the only person who hadn't learned this long ago, but just in case:

How To Make Books Readable At The Internet Archive: (on a desktop or laptop computer)

(For their instructions for mobile devices, smartphones or tablets, you'll have to go to this page: <https://help.archive.org/help/books-and-texts-a-basic-guide/>

I don't have those things, so can't judge the effectiveness of those instructions.)

Click on the Toggle fullscreen icon if you like.

(If viewing Thumbnails, they won't scroll unless in fullscreen.)

Then, One-page view icon.

Then Zoom in as much as you like.

Then, to get it to let you use the up and down arrows to scroll, click in the black area at the sides of the book page, not on the page of the book. The right and left arrows bring the next or previous page.

You can also click on the Elipses icon in the top left corner, beneath the magnifying glass Search icon, and play with the Visual Adjustments: Brightness, Contrast and Greyscale.

Inverted colors (dark mode) can turn a yellowed page dark blue with white print; rather pretty, and it is also easy to read.

Click in the progress bar below to skip around in the book, or find a specific page.

Use the Home and End keys if you need to check things at the front or the back of the book.
